What Teachers Are Saying

"This course has been eye-opening, educational, and thought-provoking. The topic that stood out to me the most is the racial/ethnic achievement gap. It is an incredibly complex topic as it cannot simply be addressed with more resources and training."

- A.C.

"My colleagues can attest to how much this class has impacted me, as I would swiftly bring them ideas or share certain inspiring videos with them...This semester teaching I have included more story-writing and story-telling than any other semester, and it is because of the resources from this class. Currently the students are making their own story-boards/ comics and it has been an educational treat for them and such a pleasure for me to read and observe their creativity."

- Molly G.

"I believe that now more than ever, teachers have the moral and professional obligation to be 'emotional coaches' and advocates for our students. I think that some ways that students can get emotional coaching is by having virtual talking circles or a type of council. Students need a safe place where they feel they can share anything and everything. In order for students to feel comfortable enough to do this, they have to have significant trust from the teacher."

- J.J.
